How the Freanch peasantry exists is a question which baffles me. William F. Vaught Has Charge of Athletics and Amusements at Training Camp.
A letter received from the United States naval station at Gulfpört, Miss., shows that the officials there are quick to recognize worth of the students in training. This is shown in the case of William F. Vaught, one of Chattanooga's young business men, who recently entered the training station.

According to this letter and a clipping from the Gulfport paper he has been trusted by the appointment of assistant to the Athletic officer who has charge of various camp enterprises as well as having charge of all athletics, amusements and entertainments. The clipping from the Gulfport paper says:

"Chaplain Taylor, who has been placed in charge of all tallor shops, barber shops, cobbler shops and laundries at the camp, advises that the coupon system is working very successfully. Each man purchases a coupon book, which holds one dollar's worth of 5-cent coupons, or more books if he so desires; and whenever he has any work done at any of the above mentioned shops the value of the work done is torn out of the coupon book. These coupons are retained by the men who actually perform the work, and are turned over to the chaplain's office once each week, and a certain percentage is paid to them.

The work is being done as economically as it can consistently be done. W. F. Vaught has been placed in charge by the chaplain to handle the detail end of this work. There will be several improvements made in the various shops, so that work can be gotten out more promptly than heretofore. Taking the new system as a whole it is a great improvement for the camp. The profits of the new arrangement is to be expended on athletics."
